From the door to hell for Chernobyl's exclusion zone, these places will certainly leave you uncomfortable with your scary vibrations. Hitting noises, mysterious screams and appearances are just a few of the scary possibilities in famous places such as the Amityville House and the Island of Dolls. When it comes to a list of the spookiest places in the world, you can count on these sites to keep you at night. Known as the "sea of trees", the forest Aokigahara looks lovely on the appearance with lush green trees. Its beauty attracts tourists and hikers, but unfortunately many visitors get lost in the thick forest and can not ask for help because their cell phones do not work in the forest. GPS systems and buccents are also working inside all the trees. Photo Cedida: Jimmyan / iStock / Getty Images Plus Some residents find that these devices stop working due to the magnetic iron in the forest soil. Others believe that it is the work of the demons, according to Japanese mythology. To make matters worse, the refrigeration forest is also famous called "suicidal forest" due to almost 100 people a year entering the forest, never to return. Xochimilco is home to one of the frightening islands of the world: Isla de Las Munecas or Island of Dolls. Hundreds of dolls are scattered around the island, hanging from trees and tied to the walls of the buildings. The only way to access the island is by boat - if you can convince the captain to take you. Photo Courtesy: FlyingCrimsonPig / Flickr According to visitors, the dolls move their hands, whisper each other and call rowers to the island. Does anyone really live there? No one occupies the island today, but it was already at home for a man now deceased named Julian Santa Barrera. After finding a drowned girl on a nearby canal, Barrera began to swing dolls everywhere until death. Some residents say that Barrera did this to ward off the bad spits. The haunting of crosses is actually a spot of pilgrimage that exists from the century XIV. The exact origin of the hill remains a mystery, but throughout its history, the Crosses hill has created a lot of controversy. At every of 1940, local residents continued to add crosses to the site to honor the rebels who died by Lithuanian independence. The Soviet Union, which occupied the Lithuanian on the time, not liked, so the Soviets destroyed the place three times. Patients who can not afford in a hospital or pharmacia visit the Akodessewa fetish market to buy remedies and talk to a local healer. Hoping to treat everything from the flu to the curses, patients take home unique items such as talisms, charms and elephant feet. elephant. How difficult it would be if you had to use a gas mask all your life. This is exactly what life is as residents on the island of Miyake-jima. Their lives rely on using frequently than rings because they occupy an active volcano. Photo courtesy: Public domain on the history of Miyake-jima, the island has evacuated several times when Mount Oyama went into eruption. Now a steady stream of venomous gas liberations from the volcano, causing employees to require the inhabitants to carry Mascaras from Gás at all times. When the tubility levels in the air jump, alarms are limited to Miyake-jima to warn the residents to put their makers. Bold Visitors à € à €
