Phone keypad not showing up when you need to type or reply to an important message? This is frustrating as the Android keyboard is the only thing you need to type text or email. The problem occurs due to many factors like lack of device memory, full keyboard cache, faulty keyboard update and many more. . If you often find Android keyboard not showing or lagging when typing, you need to fix this problem. 1. Restart your phone. Sometimes a simple trick like restarting the phone can fix the keyboard issue. Press and hold the power button and then tap Restart to restart your device. This trick should prevent you from seeing the Android keyboard. However, there is a chance that after a few days you will face similar problems. If yes, then you must read to solve the problem. 2. Exit the Beta Testing Program All major keyboard apps like SwiftKey, Fleksy, Google Keyboard, etc. start a beta testing program to test new features before release. If you're part of such a program and you're getting the keyboard not showing error message, it's time to quit it and go back to the stable version from the Play Store. On your phone, open the Play Store and search for the keyboard app. what are you using? Open the app description and scroll down and you will find an option to exit the beta program. Click on it, uninstall the app and download the latest stable version from play store.3. Updating the app All Android keyboard apps, including the default Google keyboard app, rely on the Play Store for constant updates and bug fixes. Android keyboard may not appear due to a newer version of the device with bugs. On your device, open the Play Store, go to My apps & games, update the keyboard app to the latest version available. Clear Keyboard Cache A corrupt app cache can prevent it from working properly. In case of unwanted data, it is always recommended to clear the cached data from the applicationfrom the application. Follow the steps below to clear the Android keyboard cache.1. Action. Open the Settings app and scroll down to the Storage menu. Action. Go to "Other Apps" (or "System Apps") and find the "Keyboard" app. 3. Click on the keyboard you are using and use the "Clear Cache" option in the next menu. Freeing up memory on your phone When your phone's memory becomes low, it affects the keyboard functions of your device. The Android keyboard may not show the error. It would be helpful to delete large or duplicate files using the Google Files app or the Storage menu in the Settings app. Download the Google Files app from the Play Store and it will detect huge media files and other junk on your device when it launches, which you can remove from your phone. Delete these files and your Android keyboard will have enough space to function normally. Download Google Files for Android6. Removing apps from the multitasking menu This trick works for Android phones with 3 GB or 4 GB of RAM. Opening dozens of apps in the background can take up a significant chunk of your phone's RAM. This gives the keyboard app less RAM to use on your Android phone. Open the multitasking menu, remove unnecessary applications from the system and try using the keyboard again. Try third party keyboard apps. Most users use the Google keyboard by default. If you're constantly having problems, try popular alternatives like Microsoft SwiftKey, Fleksy, Mint, or Grammarly Keyboard from the Play Store. In our experience, SwiftKey worked great on a four year old Pixel XL. There were no problems in two weeks of use. Android Keyboard Troubleshooting When the Android keyboard is not working properly, it can disrupt your workflow. Follow the steps above and fix the issue. What keyboard are you having problems with? And how did you fix the problem? The sound is muted in the comment section below. Next: Grammarly is still herea solid competitor to Gboard. Read the comparison post below to know all the differences between the two. Last Updated: July 13, 2021 The above article may contain affiliate links to assist with Guiding Tech support. However, this does not affect our editorial integrity. Content remains objective and authentic. There are rare reports of the Android keyboard not appearing or suddenly disappearing when users tap on a text field. Users say that the keyboard was working fine until it suddenly stopped showing up. This is usually caused by temporary system problems that appear out of nowhere. If that doesn't help, restart the keyboard app or disable full-screen gestures and try again. 1. Start with a simple reboot Try rebooting first. Restart your device and try typing. If the keyboard doesn't appear, make sure you've selected the default numeric keypad in Settings > General or System > Language & input. Set Gboard as your default keyboard or not, it all depends on the keyboard you are using. If that doesn't help, disable any third-party launchers you're using and stick to the system option - stock. We're experiencing some gesture-related issues with Nova Launcher on Android 10 and Android 11, and it's likely that the keyboard is disappearing as well. If none of these solutions help, try deleting the local data from the keyboard. 2. Clear local data from your keyboard No matter what keyboard you're using, whether it's Gboard or a built-in solution like Samsung Keyboard or Xiaomi Mint Keyboard, it can stop working. This is the same app as all the others, with some notable differences. And like everyoneThe application may encounter problems. The best way to fix app problems is to clear local data. This should reload the app and hopefully fix the problem. How to clear local keyboard data on Android: Open Settings. Click Applications. Expand all applications. Find Keyboard in the list of available applications and open it. Touch Storage. Erase your data and restart your device. 3. Remove updates from the keyboard. If the previous step did not help, uninstall updates from the keyboard. If Gboard is a third-party keyboard, you can uninstall it entirely, but if it's a default option, all you can do is uninstall updates and reset it to default settings. This applies to everyone. You cannot remove Samsung keyboard or Xiaomi Mint keyboard, but you can reset them. How to remove updates from stock Android keyboard. Go back to Settings > Apps > Keyboard and tap the three-dot menu. Choose Uninstall Updates. Uninstall updates and restart Android. Please update the app and check if there are any improvements. Alternatively, you can go to the Play Store and uninstall the app/uninstall updates there. 4. Disable full-screen gestures Finally, we can only recommend temporarily disabling full-screen navigation gestures. Some users have reported that the Android keyboard only fails to appear when gestures are enabled instead of on-screen navigation buttons. Of course, make sure your device is up to date and don't miss any available updates. It's also a good idea to report the problem to the OEM or Google, as there's a good chance they'll offer a solution. That should settle the matter. Restarting the keyboard Restarting the keyboard can be very effective in resolving the problem. Several readers found this helpful. While some have reported that the issue reappeared later, others have stated that it was a one-time issue that was resolved by restarting the keyboard. Go to the Device Settings menu. Scroll down to the Applications section and tap Application manager. Swipe to the All tab. Now find the Android keyboard app and tap on it. Now tap Force Stop to stop the keyboard. Exit the settings menu and use the keyboard again to see if it works. If you're using a third-party keyboard, or if the keyboard was installed by your device manufacturer, you should be able to find the keyboard you're using. Like Samsung, users will find that they use Samsung keyboard, so you will have to look for Samsung keyboard in apps. Restart the device. The application may have some problems. Restarting your device can fix basic app issues and prevent simple device crashes. Restart your device and check if the keyboard works. Many readers have found this to be a permanent solution to the problem, but those who see the problem again will try other solutions. Clear keyboard cache and data Clear app cache and data allows you to clear filesthey may be damaged or cause problems due to errors. Although deleting cache files won't delete important information, if you delete app data files, your settings will be lost. If you made certain changes to the keyboard, you would lose these settings. You need to go back to the keyboard settings and make the changes again. Go to the Settings menu on your device. Tap "Application Manager" or "Applications" (depending on your phone model). Swipe to the All Apps tab. Now find the keyboard app. This can be the Android keyboard or the keyboard you're using if you have a third-party keyboard or factory skin installed on your stock Android. Tap on the keyboard app. Click Clear Cache. Now click on "Clear Data". Click "OK" to confirm. Clear cache and data files for the Dictionary app The Dictionary app is closely related to the Keyboard app. If for some reason you're getting the "Unfortunately, the keyboard has stopped" error, it's likely due to file corruption in the dictionary application. Deleting these files may help resolve the issue. Go to the Settings menu on your device. Tap Application manager or Swipe through applications to go to the All tab. Scroll to find the Dictionary app and tap on it. Tap Clear Cache. Tap Clear data. Confirm by clicking OK. Update Google Keyboard (or whatever keyboard you're using) One of our readers pointed out that updating Google Keyboard might fix the problem. If you are using a different keyboard, update it. To update the keyboard, open the Play Store, tap the three horizontal lines, then tap My apps and games. If a keyboard update is available, click Update. Reset keyboard settings Some devices, eg B. Samsung devices use the Samsung keyboard. You have the option to reset your keyboard preferences, which may help resolve the issue. If you are a Samsung user, follow these steps to reset your settings:Device settings menu Under System, find and tap Language and input. Tap Samsung Keyboard. Now scroll down and tap Reset settings. Check if the problem is resolved. Using a Third-Party Keyboard App Those who can give up the keyboard app they use choose and use a third-party app as their default keyboard. This won't solve your keyboard problem, but you can use it. Search the Play Store for a keyboard that suits you. After installing the keyboard, you will be asked if you want to set it as default. Select the newly installed keyboard as the default keyboard. Closing remarks. How to Fix Android Keyboard Not Showing I hope you understand this article about how to fix Android keyboard not showing.
