Improve Article Save Article as Article Read Discuss Improve Article Save Article Knowing the basics of Android Studio's file structure is very important. This article explains some important files/folders and their meaning to help understand the working environment of Android Studio. The following image shows some important files: All the files shown in the image above are briefly explained below: AndroidManifest.xml: Every Android project contains a manifest file, AndroidManifest.xml, which is stored in the root project hierarchy. The manifest file is an important part of our application because it defines the structure and metadata of our application, its components and requirements. This file contains nodes for all the activities, services, content providers, and broadcasters that make up the application and broadcaster. Use intent and permission filters to determine how they will interact with each other and other applications. A typical AndroidManifest.xml file looks like this: < intent-filter > And < action android:name="android.intent.action.MAIN" /> Java: The Java folder contains Java source code files. These files are used as a driver for the user-driven interface (layout file) , gets the data from the layout file and after processing, the output of this data is displayed in the user interface. The manifest file is an important part of our application because it defines the structure and metadata of our application, its components and requirements. The use of intent and permission filters determines how they will be reconciled with each other and with other applications. A typical AndroidManifest.xml file looks like this: < category android:name="android.intent.category.LAUNCHER" /> Java : The Java folder contains Java source code files. These files are used as a controller for the managed UI (layout file). It accepts data from the layout file and after processing this output is displayed in the user interface. Works on Android backend. drawable: The Drawable folder contains a resource type file (something you can draw). Drawing objects can contain a variety of files, such as bitmap (PNG, JPEG), nine boxes, vector (XML), shape, layers, states, levels, and scale. Layout: The layout defines the visual structure of the UI, similar to the UI for Android devices. app. Layout files saved in XML format are stored in this folder. You can add additional layout objects or widgets as children, gradually building up the display hierarchy that defines the layout file. Here is an example layout file:
