Scripture Reading â ¬ "1 Samuel 16: 14-23 David came to Saul and entered into his service. 1 Samuel 16:21 And the Spirit of God departed from king Saul, and left him to go his way. Saul built his world with lies, arrogance and ambition. He had done everything in his power to build a world where he was king. So there was little room for God's way and a life of holiness, obedience and fellowship. Israel was to be a light to other nations, pointing the way to God. But with Saul as king, that didn't happen. The writer of 1 Samuel does not want us to lose these important words: â - "David came to Saul and entered into his service". David's transition to leadership in Israel included entering into the service of a mad and corrupt king. This would shape David's transition to leadership in Israel included entering into the service of a mad and corrupt king. This would shape David's transition to leadership in Israel included entering into the service of a mad and corrupt king. choice. However, while serving Saul, David could honor and serve the Lord, the true King. Today we can see that David entered into Saul's service, so that God could show His people that He knew how to choose a leader after His heart (see 1 Samuel 13:14; 16: 7). There is always more going on in life than what we can see before us. David and Adhes may not have seen it, but God was working in the background to know His purposes. Prayerlord God, being in service for you requires all my heart. Help me see your always working power behind the scenes of my life. Guide me to live faithfully for you, in the name of Jesus. Amen. Today it is a daily devotion that helps the people of God to refresh, refocus and renew their faith in Christ Jesus. Today it reaches hundreds of thousands of readers and around the world every day via email, web, mobile apps, radio, podcasts and print. Throughout the month, a talented and highly qualified author develops a single biblical theme to help readers and listeners become deeper in their love and relationship with God as they spend time with Him every day in His word and prayer. A If I tell you about my love for clean linen, do you think you're a Pollyanna Detergent Agent, sent here to get you to come and disinfect all the piles of dirty clothes spilled by your hampers? I promise I'm not a hunky, the man with the earrings who tried to seduce you into masking the kitchen floors. Our bathroom could be shown in a criminal trial of the bubonic plague and those who spread it. The floorboards in the bedroom are thick with lint and cat hair. At the bottom of my vegetable drawer is a bag of sludge that was red peppers or sweet potatoes. Or a cucumber? I don't know. And I don't even like to do the laundry "Which my husband does the most, since he is a masseur and has a lot of sheets to wash anyway. I like the folders. But not everything. I don't like to match my husband's infinite, meticulous black socks. Or try to figure out the fixed sheets. What I like is folding my children's clothes. I smooth and tidy, organizes and stacks, and what to experience is in love. I've been listening since my son, Ben and daughter, Birdy, were kids. Related: Let's do the laundry: how babies can help me feel this way, actually, since before they were born, with that first laundry dithimble pulled hot from the dryer, all those teensy socks and washcloths as a promise of happiness. I folded them on my pregnant belly and I have sent my desire to heaven: let there be joy. "Look!" I told my husband, holding up a Kimono-Tie shirt that you could mount on a microscope slide. I held him to my quasi-mom bosom, because in the absence of a real child, I adored all the precious little things of the child. Illustrated cat and laundry was rarely folded in those early days and years, given We lived mostly out of the laundry bin the way a frequent driver lives out of a suitcase. But sometimes I'd send the basket on my bed and we'd fold everything, every cotton garment perfectly pe older, the clothes represented not only the fact of a beautiful bundle in my arms, but also the children themselves, so perfectly, uniquely, in their personalities and passions. The preschool years when our son favored the color "raspberry"; our daughter's long phase of bright striped dresses that followed into a longer phase (and continuous) of trousers only; the Beatles shirt from a friend who shared Ben's Fab Four fandom; the white Birdy tee decorated with Sharpie's starbursts. I folded these clean things and knew them so well, the clothes and the Brooklyn souvenir shirt. I bet my panties and matched my socks with my winter fingernails. I also admired the washbasins I used to clean their smudged little cheeks. Doting, I pressed my nose for a bunch of clothes like I buried my face in my boyfriend's shirt when he wasn't there, half-loving mad. Folding is the origami of my devotion. I feel it even now, folding up an edgy Parks and Recreation shirt, or jeans with incredibly long legs, or piles of all my son's grey-and-black, which include huge sweatshirts that could double like curtains, because the kids have grown up and are still growing. They are giants, and their giant clothing covers the bed as if we were in a fairy tale about the laundry that was enchanted. Fee Fi Fo Fum. What is it about the growth of children - about the pleasure of parents in it? It reflects nothing but their genetic coding. I shouldn't be more proud of myself of my computer when it activates a screensaver. Yet, happiness always crashes on me like a waveathe luck of these children here with me, growing every day. Why when will they stop growing? They'll leave us. So maybe it's not a call to homework, it's a call to gratitude. And what I'm thankful is not that for the moment at least, chaos is being held at bay in our dusty and repairing home. And not only for this stupid cat, which has no clothes of its own, but has dug into the pile to sleep, and which will never grow and move. No. What I am especially grateful is that these children, shedding clothes as they are changing, passing here and now on their way to a future somewhere elseâbut here, now.
