Connect random letters together to form words and clear as many lines as possible! By Ken Michaels, Guest Writer In Shakepeare's "Hamlet", Polonius asks the prince: "What are you reading, my lord?" He is not at all satisfied with what he is reading. Hamlet replies, "Weapons, words, words". I I described the pattern earlier, communication where a sender encodes a message and then sends it through a channel (or medium) to a receiver, which decodes the message and ideally understands what has been sent. Definitely the most common way to encode a message is to choose the most appropriate words for the listener or reader. In Hamlet's case, he didn't like what he read so much that he described it in an elementary way, as mere words, rather than a message. So I thought I'd dedicate a little bit of ink to the words themselves. The words "Nym" have specific meanings ending in nym describe classes of words. Some of the most commonly used words are synonyms (equal means); antonym (means the opposite); homonym (has the same sound); and acronym (a word derived from the first letters of a more complex term, such as SCUBA or AIDS). Homo means "same", straight means "different." Therefore, if there are homonyms, it is right that there are also heteronyms. While the homones have the same sound but different vegetables (like pair and pear), the heterons are written the same but have different meanings and often pronounce: a sewing person is Sewer, but a warehouse for waste products is a sewer. Sewer, then, is a heterumony. But the Lexicon of Wildlife Wildlife no ends here. One of the sites I have recently visited2 lists no less than 26 words, many of which are rather arcane and of interest to relatively few. Some are really fun. We really need a word to say another word composed of two two set off? If yes, then Tutu, Pawpaw, Yo-yo, and bye bye are the tatonimi. A couple of weeks back, my à €
